CHAMPION JIM JEFFRIES PREFERS TO WORK OUT OF DOORS WHILE TRAINING FOR COMING BATTLE

JEFF DOES WORK ALL OUT OF DOORS

Fishing and Hunting Figure Prominently in Champion's Daily Preparations for His Coming Big Battle with Jack Munroe, the Butte Miner.

HARBIN SPRINGS, June 9 .- There must be something of the Indian in ig Jim Jeffries's blood. He hates to work within four walls. Gym training palls on him, and then there is nothing to it but a long run over the moun tains, rifle ashoulder, or a long tramp along some cool trout stream with roo

Two days ago the big champion worked hard with the pulley weights. the medicine ball and the gloves. His trainer had a rough time of it, for the indoor work seemed to put him in a bad humor, and he took his revenge out of the men who had to work with him. But yesterday he rebelled and

Jeff got up late and had his breakfast at 9 o'clock. He eats enough to supply a whole camp of the little fellows. After stowing away his forage he gathered up his tackle and expressed his intention of putting in the day at fishing. Billy Delaney had no objection, and the giant got out his mule and

There is no good fishing within a few miles of the springs. Jeff rode over to the other side of the mountain, eight miles away, where there is a

By 3 o'clock he had pulled out fifteen fine fish, from eight to fourteen inches long, and was ready for the return trip. He got back to Harbin a little after 5, fresh and fine. He was soaked to the knees, and the dust of the mountain road had drifted down his neck and caked over his sun-baked features, but the big fellow felt full of life. He insisted upon getting up a ball game as soon as he arrived, calling out his whole training staff to take a hurried bath and change of clothes. The size of the dinner he ate gave Jim Hays's cook a touch of heart trouble.

After clearing the table Jeft went to his cottage, where he played whis with Mrs. Jeff and Mr. and Mrs. Delaney until time to retire.

DELANY IS WELL PLEASED.

Delaney was pleased with the big fellow's condition. "He is all right now," he said. "I never saw him looking better. He is bigger than he ever was before in his life, but he is quick and full of ginger. I don't want to bring him down in flesh. Trying to get down to a low weight was one of Jeff's old mistakes, and he knows it now. He'll be as big as a mountain when he gets into the ring with Munroe. He sticks to the outdoor life, and the result will be seen when he fights again.

Jeffries is willing to work at anything that keeps him out in the sun. A few days ago three loads of hay were brought to the stable at the Springs. Jeff was interested at once. The stablemen were just rigging up the tackle to hoist the big bales into the loft when Jeff appeared. The champion shoved them aside and proceeded to neave the bales through the door of the loft by hand. Lifting a bale of hay is something like having a white elephant on your hands, literally speaking. Three or four good lifts convinced the champion that there was more training in the job than he wanted in one day, and he rigged up the tackle himself and went to work.

Three whole loads were hoisted into the loft before Jeff would stop. His hands were soft for that kind of work, and he had raised a fine crop of blisters. His clothes were soaked in perspiration, and he was tired. But a cool bath put him right, and he ate lunch, rested a while, and finished off with a hard afternoon in the gym.

After his work yesterday Jeff stepped on the scales. He jumped off before the correspondent could get in range, but he announces his weight at 234 pounds. That is probably about the correct figure. He certainly does not weigh less.

MUNROE WIRES EVENING WORLD THAT HE'S BETTER THAN EVER.

I have improved wonderfully in this climate. I weigh at present two hundred and eighteen, and will enter the ring at two hundred and ten perfect, and am three times faster than ever before. I have to thank Billy Roche for my condition. I am boxing daily with six local heavyweights. The only thing I'm afraid of is that the crop will run out. Play up well the new world's heavy-weight champion in The Evening World the norning of the 18th. JACK MUNROE.
